PROGRAMME FOR THE WEEK

It Includes Lectures by Such Eminent Scholars as Dr. E. O. Lyte, of Millers. ville State Normal School and Miss L. E. Patridge, Wesboro, Mass.

The second annual institute of the Scranton teachers will begin next week and be held in Young Men's Christian association hall, on Wyoming avenue. This year the city and county institutes will be separate, owing to the number of teachers that will be in attendance. Superintendent Phillips favors separate Institutes and advancess the good reason that work in city schools is very different in method to county schools, and a separate programme is really necessary. Still the greatest objection to a joint institute is the disadvantage from lack of room.

The executive committee of the city institute, consisting of George W. Phillips, city superintendent of schools:

J. C. Lange, principal of high school; Miss L. E. Penman, principal of school No. 3; M. H. Jordan, principal of school

ludge Archbald, with Other Judges, Is of the Opinion That Few Men Suffer Through Errors of the Criminal Law.

An innocent man's conviction of crime has furnished the plot for many a novel, and the central scene of numerous dramas. That there have been such incidents in real life is admitted, but there is a decided opinion that cases of this kind have been nearly, if not quite, as rare as white blackbirds. A correspondent of the Pittsburg Dispatch recently compiled quite a list of such alleged convictions, together with some vigorous comments on the sub-The Dispatch has brought the question to the attention of leading legal authorities, and has received opinions from such recognized lights as ex-Chief Justice Daniel Agnew, Judge Robert W. Archbald, Judge John W. Simonton, Judge Thomas Ewing and a number of others of prominence. They are practically unanimous in saying that there is but a very remote chance for such a conviction as is dear to the heart of the novelist and dramatist, Possible but Not Probable, Robert W. Archbald, one of the most prominent of Pennsylvania's many not-ed judges, whose name has frequently been mentioned in connection with the supreme bench, writes to the Dispatch "The probability of an innocent per-son being convicted of any serious crime, in my judgment, is very small. In some minor offenses, such as assault and battery, petty larceny and the like, and battery, petty larceny and the like, it may sometimes occur. I have known also of a few cases, where the juries have confused moral delinqency with crime, convicting the defendant because he was morally wrong, or because he had been guilty of some sharp practice, even when he ought really to have been acquitted. But the judge who presides rarely falls to correct the mistakes of the jury in any such inmistakes of the jury in any such in-stances, and, even if he does not do his duty in this respect, the consequences are not in any event serious.

"But in cases of any gravity I do not believe in this day there is any great danger of an innocent man being convicted. The law in this state is such that any man may testify in his own behalf; so that circumstances, however damaging, have the light of his testi-mony thrown upon them. In addition to this, previous good character always plays an important part in the question of a man's guilt, and may of itself tion of a man's guilt, and may of itself raise a reasonable doubt in the minds of a jury. Even if these safeguards fail the case has still to pass the gaunt-let of the trial judge, whose experience as a rule is sufficient to detect the cause of innocence. Speaking with re-gard to the courts of which I have acquaintance, I have known some inno-cent men convicted, but I have never known of one whom the judges thought innocent being sentenced. One of the most striking cases that I now recall in the courts of this county was that of a man charged with attempting to burn a house. The evidence was wholly circumstantial, and there were some pretty wide gaps in it, but the defendant was convicted and sentenced. Quite an effort was made on the score of previous good conduct to secure a new trial first and afterward to get a mitigation o the sentence, before which even the private prosecuting attorney conside, bly wavered. I was myself, however, fully assured of the defend ant's guilt, and meted out to him the appropriate punishment, and on the way to the penitentiary he confessed the whole crime. I have known of other similar cases where parties who stoutly protested their innocence on the witness stand broke down and con-fessed when brought to face the reality

One Case In Point. "It is supposed that cases of circum-stantial evidence are those from which the innocent are the most in danger, but the case of the gravest doubt of which I have any personal experience, was one in which the evidence was diwas one in which the evidence was direct and not circumstantial, the defendant charging that the witnesses who testified to his guilt had conspired against him. This was a case of attempted barn burning, and it must be confessed that the principal witness, who played the role of detective, was afterward shown to be of quite doubtful character. Still, notwithstanding all this and perhaps more that might be said, my judgment is that no innocent man need reasonably fear the chance of being convicted of any serious offense."

Scranton's Business Interests.

THE TRIBUNE will soon publish a carefully compiled and classified list of the leading wholesale, banking, manufacturing and professional interests of Scranton and vicinity. The edition will be bound in book form, beautifully illustrated with photogravure views of our public buildings, business blocks, streets, etc., together with portraits of leading citizens. No similar work has ever given an equal representation of Scranton's many industries. It will be an invaluable exposition of our business resources. Sent to persons outside the city, copies of this handsome work will attract new comers and be an unequalled advertisement of the city. The circulation is on a pian that cannot fail of good results to those concerned as well as the city at large. Representatives of THE TRIBUNE will call upon THOSE WHOSE NAMES are DESIRED in this edition and explain its nature more fully.

Those desiring views of their residences in this edition will please leave notice at the office. Scranton's Business Interests.

SUNDAY VIOLATION CASES

Came Up in Argument Court Before Judges Gunster and Edwards.

THEY DID NOT GIVE A DECISION

Arguments Made to Prove That the Con viction of Moses and Others Was Illegal-Action Taken on a Number of Other Cases.

The cases of the alleged violators of the Sunday laws came up in argument court yesterday on certiorari's from Alderman Post's court. The cases considered were those of Miss Emma Gelbert, E. Moses, McGarrah & Thomas and William Gaughan, one of their employes. Colonel F. L. Hitchcock represented the prosecution, and the defendants were also represented by counsel. Argument was heard by Judges Gunster and Edwards on the part of the defendants to prove that Alderman Post's record of the cases is defective, and that their conviction was illegal." Colonel Hitchcock opposed the position taken by the attorneys for the defense. He intimated that he was desirous of having the various points at issue reviewed, so that an appeal can be taken to the supreme court.

Other Cases Argued. The other cases that were argued yesterday were: New York, Lake Erie and Western Railroad company vs. Mrs. T. S. Myers, certiorari; Thomas Costello vs. Dennis Neary, certiorari; Harry Mills vs. Dennis Neary, certiorari; S. P. Longstreet vs. Easterbrook Bros., certiorari; George T. JAMES ANTHONY FROUDE.

A Biographical Study-For The Tribune.

James Anthony Forude, the celebrated historian, was born in 1818 and ended his earthly career Oct. 18, 1894. He was there-fore 76 years old when he died—a fair old age for a man who had lived so laborious a life as a man of letters. He studied at Oxford university and took his degree in 1840. He had intended entering the Uni-versity of the Church of England, but finding it inconsistent with honesty, to subscribe to a creed which he did not be lieve he abandoned the idea of enterin the university.

Unlike some men of his abilities he soon found his sphere and became a literary man. In 1847 he published "The Shadows of the Clouds," and two years later, "The Nemesis of Faith." These first efforts were sufficient of the control first efforts were sufficient to prove that he was a writer of great power. He and a younger brother, Richard Hurrel Froude, were starting in life at the time of the Oxford movement in which John Henry Newman played so prominent a part. Froude's brother would have gone with Newman into the fold of Rome had he lived. Two currents marked the stream of that movement, one setting in the direction of Rome and the other in the direction of rationalism or disbelled in traditionalism as represented by the Autraditionalism as represented by the Anglicans and Roman Catholics churches Froude was among those who went out.

Soon afterwasrd he came under the influence of Carlyle and found in his writings that help which he needed in his then unsettled state of mind. His literary course is marked from beginning to end by the early impulses which led him to abandon the University of the Church of England. His "Life and Times of Thomas Becket," "Short Studies on Great Subjects," "Essay on Bunyan," "Essay on Luther," "Life and Letters of Carlyle" and other works will ever stand as monuments to his vast industry, learnas monuments to his vast industry, learning and power. But the work that will entitle him to But the work that will entitle him to the proudest place among the great his-torical writers of the world is his "His-tory of England from the Fall of Wolsey to the Death of Elizabeth." In this as in his other works, we see the same lofty devotion to truth, wide grasp and com-prehension of great movements, the same intensity of feeling and business imagina-tion which are the oxecutions of a great intensity of feeling and business imagina-tion which are the essentials of a great historian. Like Carlyle, whom he called his master, he was not satisfied with hear-say or second-hand reports, but studied the sources of history and searched into original documents of the widest range in order to arrive at just conclusions,

One of the points he has cleared up is the character of Henry VIII. He has not endeavored to make a saint of him, but he has shown him to be, for that age, a great, brave and honorable man. Besides, he has shown him to be a man who was capable of learning the lessons taught by the course of events. He, who was once a devout adherent of the Roman Catholic church and the opponent of Luther, not long after, came to see the corruptions of the clergy, the rottenness of the monastic system, and the grievances suffered by the people, and so became the patron of reform. This new view is not sustained by any ingenious process of reasoning, but by a fair presentation of facts, as they are presented in contemporary documents. Henry ordered the bishops to prepare a new version of the Hible in the language of the people and also commanded that the services of the church should be conducted in the same language.

Much has been made in Henry's disfavor out of the execution of More, and Bishop Fisher. But if we consider that More was one of the most eminent men in the state, while Fisher was one of the most prominent men in the church, and both of them refused to take the oath of loyalty to Henry as against the interdict put upon him by the papal excommunication, the matter appears in a very different light. Henry was then engaged in a deadly struggle with the papacy and to let these men stand as the supporters of the assumptions of the papacy at such a time was to endanger, if not to lose his throne. Besides More and Fisher had plenty of time to consider the mater and both persisted in their refusal to take the oath of loyalty.

Let any one who is desirous of knowing the truth, take the trouble, or rather enjoy the pleasure of reading the twelve volumes of Froude's history and he will find that the aim of the author is to vindicate and not to pervert the truth of history. He makes it clear that England at that time was the battle ground between the Papacy and the Reformation, and that Henry VIII was led by the drift of events to become the central figure in the struggle, and Elizabeth after him in spite of herself. The efforts of the Papacy to crush the Reformation culminated in the Spanish Armanda under Philip II of Spain, and the destruction of that vast fleet was the crisis in the great struggle so fruitful in its results to the English race and the world.

Secretary Mahy, Mrs. Mahy and Mr. and Mrs. Pearsall have returned from Johnstown convention of the Young Men's Christian association. Secretary Mahy conducted a series of evangelical meetings, assisted by Mr. Pearsall, during which over 100 made a confersion of conversion. The conven-tion was the grandest held in connecion with the movement.

Lieutenant Spellman, who is in charge of the police district which in-cludes the North End of the city, is now enjoying his annual vacation, and Patrolman Duggan is acting lieuten-ant. Mr. Spellman is very popular in the North End of the city, is always courteous and approachable, and in fine a notable example of the fact that it a notable example of the fact that it is possible for a man to be an excellent reace officer and at the same time a gentleman. The world is improving and the public is becoming more and more exacting with regard to its public servants. The old type of officers who cultivated a manner that was brutally blunt and who used brute force rather; but the targilly discovery rather than tact, is rapidly disappear-ing, and it is well that it is so.

The current number of the Courier of Seneca Falls, N. Y., contains a para-graph concerning Issac Post that will be of interest to Scrantonians. Mr. Post is well known in this city, and has many relatives here. About a year ago he paid a visit to Scranton and was the guest of his nephew, E. P. Kingsbury. The paragraph referred to reads as fol-

"Isaac Fuller, the founder of the Seneca County Courier, has returned to Seneca Falls to live. He voluntarily resigned his position in the public printing office at Washington after a service there of twenty-five years and three months. His reasons were that Mrs. Fuller desired to spend the remainder of her life in Seneca Falls, the scene of their activities. Public Printer Benedict, in accepting the resignation, exdict, in accepting the resignation, ex-pressed the highest appreciation of Mr. Fuller's services, and there is no doubt that he could have remained as long as he chose. Mr. and Mrs. Fuller came to this place in 1837, having then been four years married, so their golden anniyears married, so their golden anniversary was passed more than two years ago. Of the men then in business in Seneca Falls only two are now living—Charles L. Hoskins, who kept a store where his son is now located, and H. C. Silsby, who was just commencing his successful business career. Mr. and Mrs. Fuller, however, remained here until 1869, and their acquaintanceship has been kept fresh by frequent visits. so that hosts of friends join in the cor-dial welcome which the Courier ex-
